papua new guinea s general election in 2007 attracted particular interest for several reasons not only did it follow what was widely acknowledged as the country s worst election ever in 2002 in which elections in six of the country s 109 electorates were declared to be failed elections it was the first general election to be held under a new limited preferential voting system it also followed the first full parliamentary term under the organic law on the integrity of political parties and candidates which had been introduced in 2001 in an attempt to strengthen political parties and create a greater degree of stability in the national parliament and was the first to embrace a whole of government approach to electoral administration through an interdepartmental electoral committee this volume provides an analysis of the 2007 election drawing on the work of a domestic monitoring team organized through the national research institute and several visiting scholars it addresses key issues such as voter education electoral administration election security the role of political parties women as candidates and voters the shift to limited preferential voting and hiv transmission and provides detailed accounts of the election in a number of open and provincial electorates it is generally agreed that the election of 2007 was an improvement on that of 2002 but problems of electoral administration and voting behaviour remain these are identified in this volume and recommendations made for electoral reform through much of the 1990s a newly hatched snake wreaked political havoc in the south when north carolina gained a seat in congress following the 1990 census it sought to rectify a long standing failure to represent african american voters by creating under federal pressure two majority minority voting districts one of these snaked along interstate 85 for nearly two hundred miles not much wider than the road itself in some places and was ridiculed by many as one of the least compact legislative districts ever proposed from 1993 to 2001 three intertwined cases went before the supreme court that decided how far a state could go in establishing voting districts along racial lines noted supreme court biographer tinsley yarbrough examines these closely linked landmark cases to show how the court addressed the constitutionality of redistricting within the volatile contexts of civil rights and partisan politics a suit was first filed by duke university law professor robinson everett a liberal who loathed discrimination but considered racially motivated redistricting a clear violation of the fourteenth amendment s equal protection clause yarbrough tells how everett enlisted associates as plaintiffs and went on to win two supreme court victories in shaw v reno 1993 and shaw v hunt 1996 both by 5 4 decisions following the creation of another flawed redistricting plan he rounded up a new set of plaintiffs to take the battle back to the supreme court but this time in easley v cromartie on the swing vote of justice sandra day o connor the 5 4 vote went against him yarbrough shows the significant impact these cases have had on election law and the fascinating interplay of law politics and human conflict that the dispute generated drawing heavily on court records and on interviews with attorneys on both sides of the litigation he relates a complex and intriguing tale about these protracted struggles his cogent and balanced analysis considers whether the state legislature was wrong in using race as a measure for establishing the new district or whether it was simply engaging in the time honored practice of gerrymandering to ensure political balance race and redistricting spotlights efforts to racially engineer voting districts in an effort to achieve fair representation by examining one state s efforts to confront such dilemmas it helps readers better understand future disputes over race and politics as well as the ongoing debates over our color blind constitution
