Causes of election-related violence

(from UNDP's "elections and conflict prevention")

1. Context
2. Processes
3. Relationships
4. Political factors
5. Media
6. Corruption
7. Security
8. Administrative

EMBs without adequate capacity, impartiality, transparency
Inaccurate databases and voter lists
Weak election operations
Poor communication between EMB, parties, voters
Lengthy, unexplained delays in results
Tabulation not transparent
Procurement not transparent
No effective complaints resolution

“How the election process and administration is designed, managed, and implemented has a strong bearing on electoral violence. Those elections considered free, fair and transparent are less likely to suffer electoral violence than those where allegations of mismanagement or deliberate cheating are prevalent.”

(from UNDP’s “elections and conflict prevention”)

“How the election process and administration is designed, managed, and implemented often reflects contexts, relationships, political factors...etc. The process can very rarely be insulated from other conditions.”

Somaliland voter registration

Context

1. Distrust between parties, with regionally-based support
2. Disregard for Constitution, rule of law
3. Weak election commission result of political bickering
4. No accurate population data, with many citizens abroad
5. Perceptions of fraud from previous elections

Voter registration

1. Advisors pressed for paper-based system
2. Commission decided on a high tech VR – cards issued on the spot, finger print scans collected to identify multiple registrants
3. Teams with 2 Ministry of Interior, 2 NEC, 1 each party, 1 appeals court, 2 police
4. Many registrants did not scan fingerprints, or registered using different fingers or other people's finger prints
5. Widespread multiple registration reported
6. Photo insufficient quality for facial recognition

Palestine 2006 and Sierra Leone 2007

Difficult political transitions – ruling party giving up power
Lack of trust between key contenders
History of conflict – many weapons in the country, youth unemployment
Rule of law challenges

= Peaceful, credible elections with results accepted

- Independent, capable, effective election commission, with chief commissioner with integrity trusted by all sides
- Consistent long-term technical advice with a united donor community
- Carefully-managed results process (with electronic tabulation)

Expectations

ICT with elections can diminish or increase the chance of electoral conflict – mostly depends how it is used. TRUST, TRANSPARENCY as well as EFFICIENCY. (ICT as multiplier)

How it works depends on the same factors that determine whether or not an election is credible (political culture, EMB competence, integrity).

Considering the trend towards biometrics and other ICT, should be realistic in expectations

Questions

1. Do IT upgrades mean more credibility?
2. Can technology compensate for lack of political trust?
3. In a divided society, where difficult to deploy people round the country, can biometrics actually prevent multiple registration?
4. How can ICT be used to increase trust, transparency (not just efficiency) in an electoral process?
5. Should there be a counter to vendors?
